BREED THEATER.

Was Justice Served? Sensational Feature Picture.

The tremendous success of the Biograph feature pictures as displayed at the Breed theater is at no time more apparent than in the big picture Was Justice Served? which is the headliner of the first part of the week. In this problem, picture is shown what might result from dircumstantial evidence, and the various conflicting incidents only serve to make the already mixed affairs more complicated and the result is a thrilling and interesting story that is filled with heart interest, the mingled pathos and enthusiasm adding to the rest of the excellent features.

Master Noonan, the phenomenal boy soprano, sang to a packed house, the patrons turning out in generous numbers to hear this little artist, who, although 10 years old, sings both night class ballads and illustrated songs in the most delightful manner, his extreme youth, and fascinating manner making him a great favorite with the audience, who insisted upon three and colors.

Every picture on the bill is exceptionally strong, the wonderful picture of Grandfather, a story of the Franco-Prussian war, being the climax of moving picture excellence. The great attendance at the Breed is most graticing to Manager, McNulty who is fying to Manager McNulty, who is most earnest in looking after the wel-fare of his patrons.

LINCOLN PARK.

The William Josh Daly minstrels made a hit last night at Lincoln park, where they opened for a week in the rustic theater. All the troupe are capital singers and Jos Nelson, the inter-There is a good deal in the bill and three is also a lot that isn't there. It worrying about what's there—that's of the stage. He sings "Gee, I Wish I Had a Girl," with chorus by the rest of the trope, and Al. Berger, another excellent tenor sings the popular "There Never Was a Girl Like You." The black end man, Jack Welch, asia the comical song "I'm Glad I'm Married," and the other end. William Oswalid, a bass singer, is heard to good advantage in "To the Boitom of the Deep Blue Sea." Jack Welch asia couple of songs. The dancing of Will Stewart and Ed. Brown is good and the hand balancing of Ed. Eusten who puts a chair on top of four bottles on a table and exectutes all sorts of daring movements high in the air brings out the most lively applause of aunty thing on the bill. The Three of Us—Nelson. Berger and Oswald—have a funny act with catchy trios and another sweetly rendered solo by Joe Nelson. The closing act, the Mozart Tio, introduces three young men who play cornet, trombone, mandolin, bin, jo and violin with much harmony and whose work on the concert chimes is exceptionally good.

Thursday and Saturday nights there is also a lot that isn't there. The interest was a list that isn't there. It worrying about tweer that sale and the tree is also a lot that isn't there. The coft is also a lot that isn't there. It worrying about what's there extains.

The staves were alightly bulging from the juice that worked within: The waste was dripping from the tap into a battered tin.

And when the autumn skies were blue, the weather clear and warm. The bees and yellow jackets bussed around it in a swarm.

The eider worked from week to week Though Dad said not to drink it, yet he "hit" it right along.

When coming from the fields at noon, our faces hot and red. We'd wait till Dad had left the scene and sneak into the shed.

And though we could have turned the tap and drunk from out the cup. We'd rather cut a wild out straw and slowly suck it up. And while the yellow jackets bused a kind of dreamy tone—
We'd suck and suck upon the straw, and listen to their drone.

Until we shut our eyes in joy and held our lips apart,

And drew the cider up the straw and downward let it start.

And earthly sounds grew far away, the bees left off their song. But still we gripped the old oat straw and pulled it good and long.

Oh, that was many years ago, and now I've left the farm,
But still I see the yellow jackets buszing in a swarm. And when I'm tired with business cares
I like to sit and dream
Of cider-barrel taps a-dripping nectar in a stream.

I'd like to open up the bung, stick in a long dat straw,
And shut my eyes in sweet content and draw and draw and draw.
